Erin is a Partner at Emmertech, a Saskatchewan-based venture capital firm focused on agtech and agribusiness innovation. In this role, she plays an active part in fund strategy, capital raising, investor engagement, and portfolio construction - supporting companies building the future of agriculture. She is deeply committed to strengthening Prairie-based innovation and ensuring producers, operators, and entrepreneurs share in the value created by the sector's transformation. In addition to her investment work, Erin serves in a board capacity with New West Concrete Group, a construction materials company focused on ready mix concrete and related products, serving communities across south-eastern Saskatchewan. She provides guidance on acquisitions, financing, governance, and long-term growth planning - bringing institutional discipline and strategic perspective to a family-owned operating business.

Earlier in her career, Erin held progressively senior roles at Saskatchewan based Greystone Managed Investments (acquired by TD Bank), with experience spanning client reporting, operations, fund accounting, product management, and performance measurement. Working in a highly regulated institutional environment, she developed a strong foundation in capital markets, governance, and operational oversight.

Erin holds an undergraduate degree in Economics from the University of Victoria, where she was a member of the women's varsity basketball team, and is a CFA Charterholder. She is excited to join the Board of the Regina Airport Authority to support the airport's long-term success through strong governance and responsible infrastructure investment, ensuring the airport continues to connect Saskatchewan's communities and economy.

Erin lives in the Regina area with her husband and their four children and remains closely connected to the communities where she lives and works.
